

the organiser of the 2018 Eleventh International Scott Conference, kindly offered me time to advertise the CFP at the conference. This was invaluable since many of our contributors came from the same group of people who had also given papers at that conference. Furthermore, I am grateful to all the contributors as well as anonymous reviewers who worked closely together to make this issue a successful collaboration. Last, but not least, I am indebted to my friend Coinneach Maclean, whose sharing with me of ideas related to the history of Scotland has been absolutely invaluable. This special issue marks the beginning of this generation's new interest in Scott, but there remains, as always, still a lot that we can explore in the future. I look forward to further collaboration with those who feel passionate about Scott's works.

Kang-yen Chiu
Taipei, Taiwan